> From the Pittsburg Paper. About Cotton Mills.

A few years ago and a cotton mill south of Mason and Dixon's line would have been considered, in some sense, a curiosity Now there are mills in almost every South ern State, and the success of these has tracted capital, and the prospect is highly favorably to the presumption that before the present decade closes two-thirds of the cot-mills, employing 202,221 spindles, wove 69,067 bales into fabrics. The increase throughout the country in the number of mills, spindles, and bales consumed over the previous year is quite marked. The figures show an increase of 350,443 spindles, and in the consumption of cotton of 17,810 bales, or 8 066,460 pounds. Massachusetts is, of course, at the head of the cotton-spinning industry of the country, baying 128 mills. astry of the country, having 128 mills, 32,149 looms, and 308,818 spindles, and con-suming about 115,000,000 pounds of cotton. The prospects of the manufacturers are at present, owing to many causes—the com-bined effect of a present excess in supply and the war in Europe—better than they have been for a long time. It may be well to mention in this connection that cotton at present is manufactured here in the north at less cost than in the south, owing to the fact that the price of labor is higher there. Female operatives, so plenty and cheap in New England, are not abundant in Georgia and Mississippi, the hands of men, who, as a matter of course, cannot afford to work as low as the women of the north. This is a disadvan-tage under which the Southern manufacturmportation of women operatives and the educating of the negro women to manage

But while the South has to contend with this, it has an advantage over the North which more than compensates for the evil of a high-priced labor market; its raw materi-You will please advise me of time and al has not to pay a heavy tax in the shape of costly transportation, both to and from the mills. This fact is bound to make the South, at no distant day, the centre of the cotton manufacturing interests of the world. Not even the mills of Lancashire will be able to compete with manufactories standing in the shadow of the "gin."
